We then define the best value for  $\lambda$  with respect to AIC as:

$$\lambda_{AIC} = argmin_{\lambda_i}AIC.$$

Hence, for each i we need to compute the likelihood of the model with parameter  $\beta_{\lambda_i}$  and k as the number of nonzero coefficients of  $\beta_{\lambda_i}$ . The likelihood, with Gaussianity assumption and covariance matrix  $\sigma I$ , is given by

$$\hat{L}_{\lambda_i} = \prod_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{\sqrt{2\pi}\sigma} \exp(-\frac{1}{2\sigma^2} (Y_i - \beta)^t (Y_i - \beta))$$

. In our setting, we compute  $S = \sum_i (Y_i - \beta_{\lambda})^2$  and then

$$L_Y(\lambda) = (2\pi\sigma^2)^{-\frac{n}{2}} \exp(-\frac{1}{2\sigma^2}S)$$

For each instance of  $Y = X\theta^* + \epsilon$  for given parameters p/n (dimensionality)\$ of k = s \* (p/n) (sparsity), while the others are fixed; we obtain lambda\_AIC, lambda\_CV, lambda\_BIC,.... the optimal calibration of lasso for a same problem and a given criterion.

We want to know given the dimensionality and perhaps the sparsity which criterion is optimal. For each instance of  $Y = X\theta^$  we may define the "optimal" value of lambda, in the sense that given the solution  $\theta^$  (unknown in practice), we look for the lambda that would give the model with the smallest error (where the argmin could run through all lambdas or only on the one given by our criterions). Note that the choice of definition of  $\lambda_{opt}$  is arbitrary, replacing the norm by an  $\ell^1, \ell^{\infty}, \cdots$  can be justified and the argmin could ignore the dependence on X.

$$\lambda_{opt} = Argmin_{\lambda} ||X\theta^* - X\hat{\theta}_{\lambda}||_2$$

Idea: modelling  $\lambda_{opt}$  as a function of the dimensionality, the sparsity, the different criterions Naive idea: Define the norm in the argmin as some sup norm so that  $hatlambda_{opt}$  is the criterion that gives the lambda of the criterion which is closest from sparsity estimate. Improved: A nearest-neighbour Improved (bis): Model  $\hat{\lambda}_{opt}$  as some linear combination of  $p/n, s, \lambda_{AIC}, \lambda_{BIC}, \ldots$  Improved (ter): Model as a polynomial/log linear of p/n and s (and  $\lambda_{AIC}, \lambda_{Bic}, \cdots$ )

Figure 1: Comparison of which criterion gives the lambda closest to best lambda for varying dimensionality and sparsity (higher is better)

Now, instead of comparing among criterions which one gives the closest lambda to the best (knowing the true solution) lambda, we want to compare for each criterion which ones give the right model dimension.

Histogram of dim_compare$CV_dim

We obtain from previous plots (with e.g. N=100, p=10 or p=100) that CV is the best criterion to obtain the right model dimension. Also BIC performs better than AIC for dimension identification, however in a high dimensional setting, the performance of BIC is quite low. In order to back this claim, we do as before and display for varying n/p the dimension of the models identified by the different criterions.

We now plot, depending on n/p and k (the number of nonzero coefficient) the performance (avg model dimension) of AIC, BIC and CV.

We can observe that when p=p0, then all criterions perform equally. This probably comes from (TODO: check and add details) the fact when the sparsity of the input vector is constant and p=p0, hence AIC and BIC can be proved equivalent. Also, in the Gaussian case this certainly amounts to solving a least square to find the CV solution which is the same as for AIC or BIC.

We can also take a closer look at what happens in the sparse low dimensional area:

We can make several observations from the plot in a low-dimension setting (for n = 50, p = 100, sigma range -

0, 5

): 1) All criterions overfit (include too many parameters) the data. CV is the best among three as it consistently identifies a dimension between 2 and 3 times the true dimension. 2) There is a cliff given by some  $\sigma_i = \phi_i(p_0)$  AIC and BIC perform nearly no dimension reduction (BIC makes dimension reduction soon) which is for small noise (!) 3) In a situation without noise CV is the best, when noise is quite large BIC performs equivalently to CV (but is faster)

At the moment, this graph makes not much sense. It might be better to plot something like  $\ell^2$  distance between  $\beta_{\lambda_{crit}}$  and  $\beta^*$ .

6 Overview of the project

You will first implement the cross validation and the BIC to calibrate the Lasso numerically in the regression setting. Then you will study the statistical properties of the lasso in terms of model selection in different simulation setting (high signal / high noise, low dimensional / high dimensional). You will compete CV, the AIC, and the BIC in order to determine if one procedure is more accurate than the other.
